Re: Cyberattack by Pathway against OpenEvidence

Dear Mr. Préfontaine,

We are in receipt of your letter dated December 23, 2024. We note at the outset that your letter does not address the issue of “prompt injection” attacks that have been carried out against Xyla Inc., d/b/a OpenEvidence (“OpenEvidence”), which were specifically identified in our December 19, 2024 correspondence.

So that we may understand the position of Pathway Medical, Inc. (“Pathway”), is it Pathway’s position and understanding that prompt-injection attacks constitute “a shared industry practice” that is “routine” and “lawful, transparent, and consistent with standard industry practices”? For the avoidance of doubt, IBM, a disinterested third party, has since March 26, 2024 defined prompt injection attacks as “a type of cyberattack against large language models (LLMs)[, in which] [h]ackers disguise malicious inputs as legitimate prompts, manipulating generative AI systems (GenAI) into leaking sensitive data, spreading misinformation, or worse.” See What is a prompt injection attack?, IBM (Kosinski, M. and Forrest, A.), Mar. 26, 2024 (<https://www.ibm.com/topics/prompt-injection>).

The prompt injection attacks carried out against OpenEvidence include the below (bolded):

In view of the evidence known to date—including, but not limited to, prompt injection attacks seeking access to OpenEvidence’s confidential, proprietary, and trade secret information, identified above—Pathway’s offer to “voluntarily pause[] access to OpenEvidence’s platform” is insufficient.

Sincerely,
